

BLUE COLLAR CEO™ Newsletter

TEDxDonMills a roaring success

Guests, friends, families and organizers gathered to a sold out Aga Khan Museum for the inaugural TEDxDonMills Designing Tomorrow event on Feb 9, 2019.

Kicking off the event with her patented bursts of reality-infused anecdotes served with a side of thought-provoking comedy, Mandy Rennehan lifted the audience off their seats, demanding their attention towards a growing, systemic issue in Canada.

"The skills gap is real," warned Rennehan, "so buckle up buttercup. We haven't seen anything yet." Rennehan brought a sense of urgency with a smile, urging society to shift its focus away from the white collar industry, if only for her time on stage.

"It's about time we started treating our blue-collar workers as they deserve to be treated," she continued. Investing time, attention and care back into the skilled trades will help bolster the economy and the future of our country as a whole, she added.

Rennehan backed her words with real world experiences in which she had been made feel like a second-class citizen; this realization was the catalyst to the fire in her heart which has created the waves of change being seen in the world today.

The crowd clearly agreed, praising Rennehan for her fresh take and energetic engagement.
